Nordea 1 - Swedish Bond Fund

ISIN: LU0064320186 (BP-SEK) / LU0539147305 (BI-SEK)

The fund aims to provide a stable, high yield exceeding the average interest level in Sweden.<sup>1</sup>

Portfolio comment as of 31/12/2019

The upswing in long bond yields continued in December. The Swedish 10-year government bond yields surged 15 bps, reaching 0.15% toward the year-end. On the other hand, yields on shorter maturities, from 2 to 5 years, remained largely unchanged and the yield curve steepened. Covered bond yields showed similar movements and the spread between government and covered bonds remained stable. In a similar manner, alike their peers in Europe, credit risk premia on Swedish corporate bonds remained unchanged.

Whilst the Swedish economy experienced a sanguine growth path accompanying a strong labour market over the past years, it has now slowed down, as the global macroeconomic environment shows. Swedish inflation has been close to the 2% target since the beginning of 2017, and the Riksbank's view is that it should remain as such going forward. In line with its view in October, the Riksbank therefore decided to revise its repo rate up to 25bps reaching the 0%-level. Its repo rate forecast remains also unchanged and the rate is expected to stay flat over the next few years. Based on this, we believe that the likelihood of a longer period of low interest rates remains high.

In this context, the fund delivered a monthly return equal to -0.82%, bringing YTD performance to 2.40% (BP-SEK).

Due to rising rates across the curve, the fund experienced a negative performance over the course of the month in absolute terms. Swedish long-term rates followed the upward trend of their European counterparts. As expected, the Riksbank raised its repo rate to zero at the end of the month and signalled that the repo rate would stay unchanged in 2020.

Overall, credit premia were stable in December. We still reckon, however, that Swedish covered and corporate bonds offer sound risk-adjusted returns. We also expect long rates to continue sideways yet for some time in this environment, which in turn ought to benefit fund returns in both absolute and relative terms.
